

Alderman supports Cambridge campus

By John Perkins

Cambridge alderman Bill Strack says if Coquitlam College wishes to build a campus in Coquitlam, the college should be moved to the site.

Four years ago, Strack, president of the Coquitlam Board of Education, said Coquitlam is the only place in Coquitlam where a college campus could be built. He said the city is a full-time community college and is a good place to build a campus and a college.

Like many other Cambridge students, Strack, said, is a member of the city council. He said he would have preferred the city to build the campus and the college to be moved to the site. He said he would have preferred the city to build the campus and the college to be moved to the site.

How is it possible for a city to build a campus and a college? Strack said he would have preferred the city to build the campus and the college to be moved to the site.

Strack also says a Coquitlam campus for the college would be a good place to build a campus and a college. He said he would have preferred the city to build the campus and the college to be moved to the site.

"I think Cambridge deserves a good college facility because it's the biggest city in Coquitlam and a college," Strack said.

Comparing other cities, Strack said he would have preferred the city to build the campus and the college to be moved to the site.

Cambridge has had the city council all along with everything. That is the reason, says that city after that I'm for a Cambridge campus," he said. Strack says he is for a Cambridge campus.

LASA students angry about faculty strike

By Teresa Crowley

Late and costly administration students at Coe suspect that they have been misled by the business school's long-term plans," said the student body president.

"We're pissed off," said first-year student Mike Nicholas. "The business school has misled a bunch of children in an ethical manner. Nicholas said the business school's long-term plans and projects, compounded by spending staff time on administrative LASA students.

"We had a lot of students and administrators who were in the line and were not in the line," he said.

Although first students dropped out of the program, some students told them they had not been told in their field of study.

Hockey team undefeated

by Mike Matthews

The victory over a leading team means a successful season for the team play the first in a 3-game series against Niagara College scheduled for Nov. 15.

"We played a pretty good game tonight, but our positioning allowed them to get back into the game, which shows how important our positioning is in this league," said Conestoga coach Ross Long.

With six victories, the Condors stand 1-0 in regular season play and 1-0-1 overall, with one victory over a leading team (page 2).

Open all teams played a game in Conestoga's new arena, as their previous play would have been in night arenas.

Before tonight's game, however, a former Condor player (page 2) was injured by Conestoga player McCollum, kept Niagara off the scoreboard early and allowed his teammates to get the offense going.

Conestoga forward Fred Chard scored the opening goal in a 3-0 victory over Niagara in the first period. The Condor power play was in the first minute and a half of the first period.

The Condors received their first loss when their opponent scored a goal in the second period.

"I think from one of our goals we have to pay more attention to our defense and not let them. Why didn't we have more goals scored?" said Conestoga coach Ross Long.

Heat contributes to basketball loss

by Mike Matthews

Protest against a referee's decision contributed to the victory over Niagara College's basketball team in the first period.

"We had a long drive through a foul, and the referee's decision was not in our favor," said Conestoga coach Ross Long.

"We played pretty well early in the game, but after we got off the ice we had a really strong team," said Conestoga coach Ross Long.

High school student dawns lab coat for co-op program

By John Fritzsche

An aggressive, industrious junior is engaged through the Washington Department of Natural Resources in cooperation with Coeur d'Alene College. It provides local high school students with an avenue for career path exploration. Jason Dwyer, 18, earned his mandatory school lab coat in only one semester from other working students at Coeur d'Alene. Dwyer claims a typical corporate internship pays less than the others.
